English Language Arts

We turned over another vowel this week and learned the two sounds for the letter e. The sound card for the letter K is called cracking nut just like the letter C. We spent a few minutes talking about the cat/kite rule when trying to figure out when to use c or k at the start of words. I showed them a poster about the rule they can use when they are writing. We also looked at the letter Qq and that sound card is called, Quacking Duck. The children discovered that q and u have gotten married through the reading of the book, The Marriage of Q and U. Q never shows up in a word without its partner u. This week we read a wordless book called, In The Woods, which allowed us to explore many types of plants and wildlife that live in our woods. We followed up this book by making beautiful wildlife collages. The children also enjoyed reading two books about Raccoons that taught us a lot about these nocturnal creatures. We began making cute raccoons to hang in the hallway. We also read the book, Animal Homes. Throughout the reading we discussed which animals were wild as well as which ones live in NJ. Together we enjoyed discussing the animals in the book, In the Forest, that live around here. Next week we look forward to the culminating event of the NJ Wildlife unit with a track trapping expedition. The children love singing our songs, "Gray Squirrel" and "Mr. Turkey". Ask your child to sing them for you. This week we watched two awesome videos about forest wildlife and food chains. The seed investigation we did helped the children understand how important the sun is for plants and how it impacts food chains.

Math

We began a new center sheet last week. We made American Indian corn patterns today and it will look great when I hang in up the hallway. Here are a list of the activities the children have been working on; bear dot to dot, acorn counting, stack tell spin and win game, leaf ten frames, and turkey number ordering. Stack tell spin and win is a game that involves comparing greater than and less then. Everyone enjoyed playing the game against me and can't wait to play it in the classroom next week. Sometimes children have a hard time accepting that the person with no cubes left is the winner!

Religion

In religion this week, we discussed our five senses. The children enjoyed talking about their five senses again. We talked about our senses being a gift from God. We also enjoyed talking about how we each have different gifts and talents. The children were amazed to discover no one in the world has the same fingerprint as anyone else. We continue to sing "The Ten Commandments." Our Promise magazine was looked at today to get ready for the Gospel reading this weekend.
